White House Renames Black History Month To All History Month

In a new executive order, President Trump announced that Black History Month will be renamed to "All History Month" as part of the administration's reversal of the "radical Marxist transgenderist Democratic agenda that refuses to treat all history equally."

The move, which nearly every humanitarian and equal rights organization immediately condemned for being a "dramatic rollback of all of the progress we've made towards racial equality in the last century," follows similar orders meant to eradicate DEI initiatives across the country.

House and Senate Democrats voiced their opposition to the move, and announced plans to protest by "sending a strongly worded letter to the administration" and "continuing to vote to confirm Trump's cabinet nominees."

"All History Month will be a celebration of EVERYONE'S history, beginning in the Late Proterozoic all the way through the Anthropocene," said White House Press Secretary Karoline Leavitt. "Though there are certain concerning gaps in the fossil record."

Leavitt said she was particularly looking forward to celebrating the development of crop rotation systems on the 13th and the invention of the steam engine on the 21st. A memorial for the Cretaceous–Paleogene extinction event will also be on display at the Smithsonian for the entirety of the month.

The Trump administration also plans to rename "Pride Month" to "The Seven Deadly Sins Month."

At press time, a Trump aide set the White House televisions to The History Channel and parentally locked the controls, announcing "the password would be released at the end of the month."

New "Department Of Racial Purity" Announces Aims To "Streamline US Tax Policy"

The Trump Administration's newly-established Department Of Racial Purity (DORP) has declared its program goals to "streamline US tax policy" and "cut down on wasteful government expenditures."

"Our intention is to purify the ranks of our government of those that are unacceptable," explained Aryanna Himmler, Chief Secretary of DORP, "which we will do by purely bureaucratic means, using the executing—I mean, executive—powers of the federal government."

"The woke media is already falsely claiming that we have malicious intentions after we reduced the tax burden on Volkswagen, Ford, and Mercedes-Benz," claimed DORP Press Correspondent—brought to you by Palantir—Joseph Reich. "When has partnering with major auto manufacturers ever been a harbinger of fascism?"

"Though thousands of poor black children in sub-Saharan Africa will die from our move to cut USAID's HIV prevention programs, we want to emphasize that this decision is in no way racially motivated," said Reich. "Survival of the fittest, and all that. We call it 'financial Darwinism.'"

The affiliated DORP Youth will aim to combine the Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts of America into one "Überscouts" organization and sell Pfeffernüsse cookies, with revenues supporting the Alternative for Germany.

Final reports reveal that a swastika was spotted pinned to Himmler's lapel, which she claimed was meant to symbolize the department's commitment to the Hindu values of "prosperity and good fortune."

The Department of Female Subservience stated that they will strive to improve America's balance of payments over the next four years.

University's Plan To Replace All Buildings With Perfect Replicas Over Winter Break Complete Success

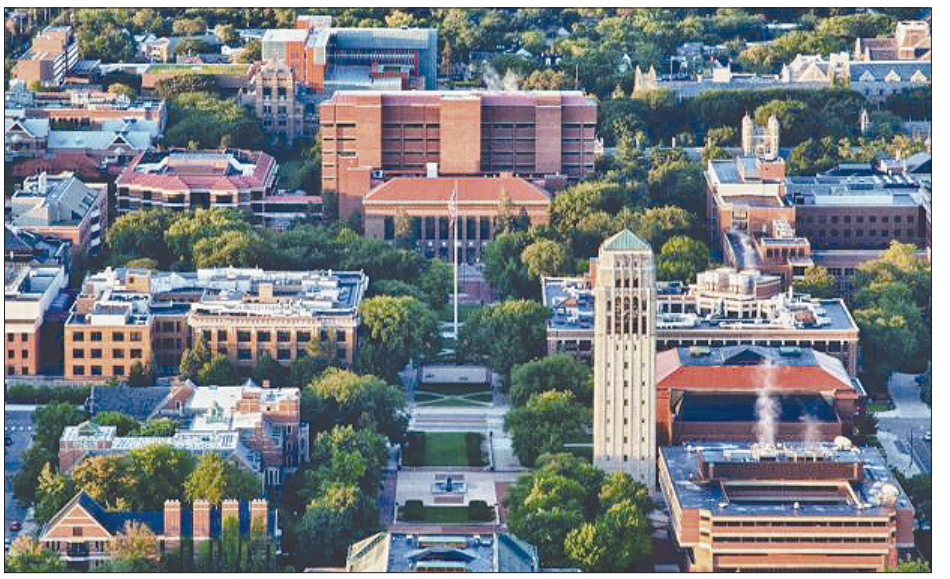
Following three weeks of intense, round-the-clock construction work during winter break, university administrators announced Monday that their ambitious plan to replace every single campus building with identical replicas was a complete success.

"We're pleased to report that the construction was executed flawlessly," said President Ono, speaking from what appeared to be an exact duplicate of his original office. "The beauty of doing it over break is that when everyone returns, they'll just assume everything is exactly as they left it – which it technically is."

The multibillion-dollar project, which involved demolishing and meticulously reconstructing 584 buildings using visually identical but nonetheless atomically different material, was reportedly prompted by a facilities assessment that found it was the most logical way to spend university funds.

The reconstruction faced a series of delays in finding different yet suitably identical dinosaur bones to replace those in the Museum of Natural History. Ultimately, new bones were unearthed just in the nick of time.

"The original buildings had their charm, but were getting old," said junior Tula Webber. "These new buildings are just as old as the old ones in terms of all of their constituent parts, but are nonetheless, in a difficult to articulate way, newer."



The University reassigned mycologists from research to grow mold in the exact places and shapes as the old buildings.

Early Semester Blue Bus Offers Thrilling 4-D Crowd Crush Experience

By the second week of classes, students had begun wedging themselves into the bus rafters in search of a more spacious ride.

According to eyewitness reports from the Central Campus Transit Center, students were lined up "around the block" Monday morning to experience what's been described as a "heart-stopping, lifelike crowd crush thrill ride experience" on the Bursley-Baits blue bus.

Students were "literally running over one another" and "stampeding" out of excitement to get a chance to be one of the lucky few to experience the crowd crush simulator.

Unlike traditional crowd crushes, such as those at concert venues or sporting events, the Blue Bus Crowd Crush Experience isn't associated with any superstar or athlete. "People are just squeezing and shoving for the love of the game," said bus driver Jim Macron. "I've often been asked if I've ever considered telling folks that the bus is full. And the answer is no. Our motto is 'there's always room for one more.' Just stay the fuck behind the yellow line."

"Another benefit over 'true' crowd crushes is that with this one, there's literally nowhere for you to go," said Macron. "You're just squeezed so hard you're lifted off your feet, unable to breathe, until we arrive at Pierpont Commons. It's lowkey hot."

"We did our best to export that feeling you get at the student entrance to The Big House right on to the buses you ride every day," said transportation coordinator Melissa Boustaup. "No longer is that special experience saved for eight home games a year. Lucky students can get a taste any time, any day."

Well, it's been quite a run for the United States of America. 249 years seems plenty long enough for a country anyway. Just a shame that we all happen to live here during the whole downfall situation. I did enjoy having a government, I think. Alas! Shoutout to the freak who sent us a really strange article via interdepartmental mail. We won't be publishing that, thank you very much. Thanks as well to all those who applied this past cycle. Always honored that people want to join our silly publication. A big fuck you to that guy who said we should stop wasting our money on print media. That's whole point, asshole. BTW, have you guys been watching Severance? Best thing on TV rn. They should invent Severance for having to do copy edits. That's all for now. Area Stoner Celebrates "Heroic" One-Day T-Break With Bedtime Bowl

Weber was last seen accepting the Key to the City, and then using it as a pipe.

Ross senior Dylan Weber, known by peers as "a massive stoner," reportedly completed a one-day tolerance break last week after smoking a bedtime bowl.

Friends and acquaintances of Weber described the T-break as "heroic" and "a herculean task, at least for that guy." Noah Reynalds, Weber's best friend and fellow marijuana user, expressed surprise at Weber's T-break. "That crazy son-of-a-bitch, he actually did it. I mean, a morning is one thing. He's done a morning before, but a whole day? I never thought he could manage it."

Macy Cooper, Weber's current situationship, said she was impressed by the commitment Weber demonstrated. "This is something Dylan has wanted to do for months, and he really followed through this time. I'm so proud of him. Maybe now he'll even be able to commit to me."

In an interview after his bedtime bowl, Weber said this T-break gave him a sense of accomplishment. "Now that I've done this, I feel like I can do anything I set my mind to. Before, I had never even dreamed of a two-day break, but now that feels… woah… wait, what was I saying? Damn, that break really did the trick."

Regent Sarah Hubbard Last Seen Kissing Bloody Police Baton Goodnight

Sources report that University of Michigan Board of Regents member Sarah Hubbard rushed back to her Meridian Township home late last night in order to kiss a bloody police baton that she keeps encased in glass goodnight.

"I can't sleep without it," said Regent Hubbard while panting so hard she fogged up the display case glass. "Sometimes I have a terrible nightmare where University students begin peacefully protesting freely on campus. But then I just walk over to Mr. Batony and calm right down."

Sources close to Regent Hubbard confirmed that the blood-soaked baton was a gift from the local Ann Arbor Police Department after one of their recent encounters with a homeless man wielding a dangerous amount of loose change.

"Sarah is a special little trooper," said Chief of Police Andre C. Anderson. "You can tell because of the 'Junior Trooper' sticker she wears on all her clothes. Anytime we stop a dangerous criminal, or stop a felony, or pepper spray minors, we always give Sarah a call. She loves to pick over our evidence. She has a bit of a collection going. Or as she calls it, a 'shrine.'"

At press time, Hubbard announced plans for a SWAT team themed birthday party. The event will include numerous police themed party games such as "pin the cuffs on the Gender Studies student," "Duck, Duck, You're under arrest for trespassing," and a "Misdemeanor Piñata" which is where they make whomever is in the jail holding cell hold a bunch of jolly ranchers.

Authorities have already secured a riot shield for Hubbard's birthday, though refuse to comment on "ongoing birthday present procedures."

5 Minutes Of Calm Breathing At Start Of Lecture Great For Reducing Anxiety From Being 5 Minutes Late

Reports from students in POLSCI 321 indicate that the "calm breathing exercises" conducted at the start of each lecture have yielded positive mental health outcomes for attendees, particularly for those students experiencing anxiety over "being about five minutes late" to lecture.

"Taking time at the beginning of each class to orient ourselves and release negative emotions has really helped me engage during lecture," explained Sandra Woodly, an LSA junior. "I've never actually done it, of course, but those extra five minutes give me plenty of time to grab a coffee before anyone tallies attendance."

"I was skeptical at first, but the routine is actually very soothing," said sophomore Daniel O'Leary. "There's nothing in life quite as relaxing as a chance to be on your phone in a lecture hall and completely tune out the professor."

"I do my best to create an environment where students feel comfortable. After all, there are plenty of studies showing that anxious students retain less material," claimed professor Martha Angstrom. "My students love our five minute breathing exercises. They've been encouraging me to double the time to ten minutes."

At press time, O'Leary was seen popping in Airpods and queuing up a Netflix show as the attendance sheet was passed around.

Boss Would Be Likeable If Not For Liberal Arts Dialect

Student employees report that their boss would be "better" if they didn't talk with a "liberal arts dialect."

According to linguist Aliyah Daughterlfy, "liberal arts dialect," also known as LAD, refers to "the use of excessive words to convey simple concepts in an unnecessarily academic way." Daughterly's research indicates that telltale signs of a LAD user include "a desire to foster a space, love of identity wheels, and passive-aggressive comments."

Recent studies suggest that one in three University of Michigan student employees have a LAD boss. "My director's fine until he twists his words to get his way," commented student employee Maisy Buchanan. "Like you're not inviting me to go to the outreach event. You're telling me to because you're my boss."

Niall Hodge, a manager for the Office of Humanizing the Humanities and LADer, disputed claims LAD could make a supervisor seem annoying. "Since I strive to center and uplift student voices within institutions, I don't think I even bring supervision into the space," remarked Hodge. "In fact, I don't believe in hierarchy at all. My employees are the same as me, except when it comes to pay grade, authority, and ability to fire someone."

Sources report that after learning that LAD could be perceived negatively, Hodge "reflected deeply on what his language brings to the social space." He plans on "hosting a dialogue to create a meta-discourse on his use of LAD in the workplace." Employees say that it is a mandatory staff meeting.

House Divided Over Way To Kill Spiders, Rats, Landlord

A four-roommate house in Kerrytown is reportedly divided on how they should kill their house spiders, rats, and landlord.

One roommate, Emma Zellinger, a proponent of non-violent extermination, explains, "Sometimes, mice will scurry past me while I cook dinner. And, other times, I'll walk into the kitchen and see our middle-aged landlord eating from our pantry and asking if we are planning to renew our lease. He's only there at night, so I think we just need to do a better job of sealing entry points."

Another roommate, Marta Macron, is ready to take a more violent approach. "I think we need to leave traps," Macron said. "Not the humane ones though. The death ones. Some can have cheese, some can have poison, and others can have a one hundred dollar bill. I think that ticks all the boxes."

"I think we need to starve them out," said roommate Joanna Doven. "If we stop eating and remove all food from the house, then they will also starve to death. Problem solved, hard but worth it."

At press time, their landlord was seen struggling to get out of a human-sized glue trap.

Student Punished For Drinking First Half Of Four Loko With Second Half Of Four Loko

A jury of peers announced the sentencing when they collectively chanted "CHUG! CHUG! CHUG!"

Reports have confirmed that following the completion of the first half of his Four Loko, freshman Grant Weiss has been sentenced to finish the second half.

Upon downing the first half of the drink, Weiss was quick to express remorse for his actions, lamenting the fact that his status as an inexperienced drinker was taken advantage of with the low price and high alcohol content.

Despite these claims and having no prior history of Four Loko consumption, the Econ major was not offered a plea deal or reduced sentence. The prosecution cited statements he made earlier in the night vowing to "get fucked up on a Floko" as evidence that his actions were premeditated.

Those close to Weiss expressed that they felt the ruling was "tough but fair." Longtime friend Thomas Jackson maintained that "he should've known what he was getting into" and that there were "plenty of warning signs."

"We all tried to point out that the gaudy designs on the can, nonsensical flavor name, and general resemblance to battery acid in both appearance and taste were all indications that the drink wasn't fit for human consumption," said classmate Will Shockley. According to Shockley's testimony, Weiss responded to this by saying "that doesn't apply to a beast like me."

At press time, Weiss was unavailable for comment. The last contact he made with friends after being walked back to his dorm were a series of incoherent texts and voicemail messages.

Uh Oh! Professor Not Nodding Along While Student Answers Question

After posing a question to her class, Professor Addison Montgomery reportedly "made no effort" to nod along while After posing a question to her class, Professor Addison Montgomery reportedly "made no effort" to nod along while one of her students responded.

According to several at the scene, the incident occurred during Wednesday's meeting of AMCULT 103: First-Year Seminar in Gender and Progress. The tense moment has led many to question the sincerity of Montgomery's claim that "there are no wrong answers."

"As soon as I opened my mouth I knew it was a mistake," freshman Miriam Penny said. "I gave my interpretation of the text but didn't get so much as a head tilt, so I just kept talking until something landed. I don't think anyone really paid much attention, though."

But unfortunately for Penny, the moment did not go unnoticed. "Oh yeah, that shit was so painful to watch," said Jon Witherwiler, an LSA freshman who sits next to Penny in class. "Professor Montgomery straight up stared into her soul, daring her to dig herself into a deeper and deeper hole."

According to a poll conducted by the Pew Research Center, Penny's experience is just one among a larger trend in college-level seminars. The study found that over 80% of undergraduates feel that their professors are "looking for an answer that reflects their own perspective," despite any classroom aphorism suggesting "everyone's opinions are welcome."

"To be honest, I thought I was nodding along," said Montgomery in regard to Penny's remarks. "I must have just been distracted because it was one of the dumbest answers I've ever heard."

Local Leasing Company Generously Raises Rent, Adds Asbestos

Tenants renting from Michigan Rental report that the company is raising rent by only $500 this year—while generously adding the benefit of extra asbestos to battle the cold temperatures.

LSA sophomore Marshall White said, "It's really great of them to think of us. I was worried it was a little drafty in my apartment given the ice forming on my windows, but thanks to the renovation by Michigan Rental, now I have ice and a chance for lung cancer!"

"I thought my rent was a little too cheap," said Ross junior Maizey Aikawa. "Especially given that the extra asbestos has added a nice shine to my walls. They've even emailed to let us know they're planning on adding a coat of lead paint to the drywall and furniture tomorrow morning!"

In an email to tenants, Michigan Rental said, "The rise in rent simply reflects the high inflation of recent years. It's natural for landlords to raise rent upwards of 20% every year." They went on, "Performing mandatory renovations of all properties to add asbestos insulation is just our way of giving back to our gracious tenants."

Hatcher Graduate Library Reportedly Contains No Hatcheries, Eggs, Poultry of Any Kind

Sources report seeing a desperate Evanston attempt to smuggle various non-avian specimens such as gecko, cobra, and platypus eggs into the U-M library.

A recent bombshell report has indicated that the Hatcher Graduate Library, despite the presence of the word 'Hatcher' in its name, contains no hatcheries, chickens, poultry, or even just a friendly chicken walking around in a corner somewhere.

"At first I thought maybe I was just in the lobby or waiting area or something," said LSA junior Nick Evanston. "I was sure that when I walked into the stacks I would be greeted with the sweet smell of scrambled eggs, or at least some chicken shit, but when I got there I just smelled a bunch of dusty old books. I won't even try to walk on eggshells, this is an outrageous betrayal of what the library is supposed to stand for."

After the sweeping investigation determined that not a single feather was to be found in the establishment, efforts to rectify the library's false advertising were repelled with force. Attempts were made to introduce chickens and eggs in various stages of life to the building, but all were rebuffed, with librarians claiming that "no pets or food are allowed in the building," and "it's not an actual hatchery you fucking dumbasses, it's just named after an old white guy from the 50s."

"It's really left a fowl taste in everyone's mouth," Evanston said. "I'm working with several other students to organize a protest, but everyone's too chicken to actually flock to the diag, egg each other on, and ruffle the feathers of the university administration."

At press time Evanston was seen opening an investigation into the seeming lack of mortar, stones, clay, and other bricklaying materials in Mason Hall.

Bitch Roommate Standing In Kitchen Again

On Tuesday evening, sophomore Jenny Roberts returned to her house to find that her bitch roommate Allison Greer was once again standing in their kitchen "like she owns the place."

Greer, who has been reported to give off a "kinda weird vibe" with "clearly insidious intentions", has reportedly been seen standing around the microwave several times since their lease began in mid-August.

"I don't understand why the fuck she's always in there," complained Roberts, "like who does she think she is? Why does she need to be in the kitchen?"

While Roberts and Greer have never engaged in a direct altercation over Greer's "unfriendly" and "disrespectful" habits, Greer has reportedly noticed her roommate's hostility towards her being in shared spaces. Defending her occupation of common rooms, Greer stated that she "paid for all the forks" and "also needs to eat food sometimes."

Despite Greer's reminder that she is also responsible for half the house's rent, Roberts has maintained her frustration, stating that Greer "has no right to stand there."

At press time, Roberts was seen seething over Greer's decision to shower in their shared bathroom.

U-M Promises To Finish Construction On All Cool Buildings Immediately After You Graduate

According to a statement released by U-M's Planning Commission last Thursday, construction is expected to wrap up on all of the University's coolest new buildings immediately after graduation.

"Here at Michigan, we're proud to be on the cutting edge of building technology," said Matt Daniels, Director of Construction for the University of Michigan. "With the new Central Campus Recreation Building and the Elbel Field dormitory complex, we're pushing the boundaries of what college buildings can be."

"The CCRB will have a climbing wall, ice skating rink, free massage parlor, and hot yoga studio. The Elbel Field dorms will feature functioning heating AND cooling systems and we are considering investing in real mattresses for the beds. Likewise, the dining hall at Elbel will have chicken cooked to 165 degrees…every single time. The best part is that all of these developments will be finished just as soon as you graduate," said Daniels.

"We want all students at Michigan to be able to benefit from our world-class facilities," said Daniels. "Unless you're a current senior, in which case we don't really care that you had cockroaches in your freshman dorm and the old CCRB was haunted."

Daniels also announced plans to build a rapid transit system with an estimated completion date of "the summer after you graduate."

"This is just the way it goes," says 2023 graduate Stefan Carter. "They added the Union Panda Express and also indoor plumbing right after I graduated."

Where To Put Big Ass Coat During Class Ranks Among Top Concerns For Students

According to one insider, CGS has begun drafting up legislation for mandatory coat checks in lecture halls.

A recent poll conducted by the University of Michigan found that students are heavily concerned about where to put their long ass coats during class.

LSA Sophomore Chris Jackson participated in the poll, saying that "normally I put my coat on the back of my chair, but then I have to sit on part of it the whole time and it kind of makes me feel like I am sitting in a booster seat and someone is going to come feed me."

Other students, including Ross junior Jessica Mime, try to put their coat on the floor.

"I always try to put my coat on the floor into a little ball but it always expands and then people have to step over it."

Rot McGee, one of Mime's classmates, was injured after trying to step over her coat. He explained: "I tore my ACL, PCL, and meniscus last week after I tried to step over her coat. I almost made it but my foot caught the end and I slid into the splits. All while this was happening she was watching fucking TikTok with noise-cancelling headphones on."

Although some students put their coats on the chair next to them, the poll shows that 98% of students think those people are "the biggest assholes at this school."

At press time, the university is trying to fix this problem through a new social media campaign that encourages students not to wear coats at all because "frostbite stimulates the brain."

Student Proud Of Himself For "Getting Back On The Grind" After Reading Class Syllabus

In what he's hailing as a personal victory, University of Michigan sophomore Ethan Badgley expressed immense pride after completing what he called a "strong start to the semester" by reading the syllabus for his History 104 class.

"Man, it feels great to be back on the grind," Badgley said. "It might have taken me 15 whole minutes to go through the course policies, but it all comes down to discipline at the end of the day."

According to sources, Badgley sat down at his desk at around 12 PM, opened Canvas, then went to the Wordle. Once he finished the Wordle, the Mini, the Strands, the Octoquartrotriogurdle, and the Bananagrammaticaladle, he decided to take a break for his hard work, rewarding himself with a 45-minute scroll on TikTok.

Friends close to Badgley were impressed with his work ethic. "Honestly, I don't know how he does it," said roommate Kyle Peterson, who walked into their apartment to find Bandgley staring contemplatively at the syllabus. "I asked if he wanted to grab lunch, but he said he needed to 'stay locked in' and keep reading."

By 2 PM, Badgley declared the day's work complete and treated himself to a celebratory nap.

Young Professor Finding New, Hip Ways To Teach Class Absolutely Nothing

According to students, the MATH 215 GSI for the course is a musical education major. The first discussion section was titled "Derivative Disco."

Students of MATH 215 have excitedly confirmed that first-year professor Thomas Jannsen has introduced the math department to new and engaging ways of teaching absolutely nothing about calculus.

Jannsen has allegedly made the entire class Kahoot-based and encourages the use of CoolMathGames as a source for practice problems and reference. "His approach to teaching multivariate calculus is so innovative it's mind-boggling. I actually cannot comprehend how any of his methods are supposed to work," said one sophomore.

Students have reported that the professor's lessons feel like "he took the calculus textbook and threw it out, literally. It hit someone," and that "it's like he's not even talking about calculus sometimes." In addition to assigning the math problem from "Good Will Hunting" on the first day of class, Jannsen has placed heavy emphasis on students reflecting on how "the numbers make them feel."

"I just feel like traditional methods don't focus enough on the subjective side of math," said the new associate professor. "Calculus isn't some rigorously proven framework for studying continuous change with indispensable applications in science and engineering. There's still a lot of room for interpretation."

At press time, Jannsen was gearing up to teach the second half of the course in Arabic to ensure that students understood the "history of the numbers they're working with."

Innocent Freshman Confuses Winterfest With Winterfest

In her second semester of college, freshman Suzie Blair reportedly learned the difference between Winterfest and Winterfest the hard way.

"I heard that Winterfest is a great way to learn about new clubs and student organizations on campus. I hope to join 'Friends for Animals' where they volunteer at animal shelters!" said Blair. Upon arriving at 5866 Crawford St. "bright and early" on Saturday morning, she was confused to see "muddy frat boys wrestling in the snow" instead of "bright-eyed, passionate, and like-minded peers."

"Even when I approached a nice-looking girl wearing faux fur earmuffs and asked her where I could find the 'Friends for Animals' table, she just gave me a dumbfounded look and offered to redirect me to a nice girl named Snow," Blair recalled.

Blair reported that she "could not find Snow," clarifying that every time she asked someone for Snow, they would just respond by handing her "a small bag of powdered sugar" and offering her "a bump." Blair explained that she "had never met so many other people that also loved fist bumps."

Further accounts indicate that freshman Danny DeMarco was met with similar confusion when he showed up to the IdeaHub in the Michigan Union "in a hockey jersey and five drinks in." DeMarco reported feeling "jarred" after being met with "over-excited nerds" trying to recruit him for their IM volleyball team.

God Backed Up On Prayers, Still Responding To Titanic Passengers

Sources close to God refused to comment on which religions go directly to spam.

Sources from within the Kingdom of Heaven have confirmed decade old rumors which allege that God is backed up on prayers, with the current backlog extending to the desperate, panic-stricken pleadings for salvation from passengers stuck on the Titanic as it sank.

Jesus Christ, God's only begotten son, expressed concerns about the delay in prayer responses. "Look, I obviously love the guy, but the inefficiency… I mean, come on. He's still working on answering people who died decades ago. Do you understand how embarrassing it is running into people up here just for them to ask for the hundredth time when Dad will get back to them? All I can say is that when I'm in charge, prayers will be answered on time, every time."

A former employee of the Kingdom of Heaven who took the form of a snake in order to remain anonymous said this backlog is proof of God's inadequacy and perfect evidence that his commands should be disregarded. "God commandssss you to be punctual and attentive to your fellow man, doessss he not? But what kind of example doessss he ssssset? If he cannot hold to hissss own sssstandardssss, then why sssshould you? There issss no reassson not to give in to ssssin."

At press time, God himself could not be reached for comment.

Newsom Promises To Rebuild LA Just As Bad As It Was Before

In a press conference late Tuesday evening, California Governor Gavin Newsom spoke to reporters, policymakers, and concerned citizens about his plan to rebuild Los Angeles following the devastating wildfires earlier this month. "It's simple," he said. "We're going to build LA back in a way that is just as bad—if not worse—than it was before."

"We're doing everything we can to make sure that absolutely none of LA's endemic urban planning issues are rectified in the wake of this crisis," said Newsom. "We're hoping that LA 2.0 is at least twice as car-dependent as the first version. And, if we're lucky, just as unaffordable."

The governor outlined his detailed plan to ensure that no improvements would accidentally be made while rebuilding the neighborhoods ravaged by the Palisades and Eaton fires. While some critics have noted that the fires represent a chance for a "radical fresh start" and "opportunity to right the wrongs of the past," Newsom promised stakeholders present at the press conference that "the LA of tomorrow will be just as expensive, traffic-choked, and fire-prone as the LA of today, hopefully with even more boutique grocery stores."

According to Anne Woodson, a local yoga instructor who lives in her car, she is "relieved" that the "character" of Los Angeles will be preserved in the rebuilding efforts. "For a minute I was worried they might use this as a chance to make sweeping improvements to the crisis of housing affordability in this city," she said, "but Newsom put my mind right at ease. I'm just glad that all the large, cumbersome highways went completely unscathed in the fires."

At the conclusion of the press conference, Newsome also announced a plan to improve the state's wildfire preparedness, which was to simply "imprison more people."

Facetime With Aging Mother Great Time To Look At Own Face

After her mother said she was divorcing her father, Fan screamed because she noticed her makeup was smudged.

A recent study suggests that a routine Facetime with your aging mother can be the perfect opportunity to check your hair or complexion rather than listen to her ramble endlessly about her day.

"As I get older, I realize that the time I have left with my mom is limited," said LSA junior Jenny fan. "She won't be here forever, and it devastates me to think that there'll come a day when I won't be able to hear her voice again. But it can be difficult to pay attention to her talk because I want to look at my own face."

Fan's mother, who is nearing the age of 60, speaks often about routine events such as grocery shopping and cooking dinner, as well as getting lost while driving, forgetting where her keys are, and losing her life-sustaining medication.

"Sometimes, when she smiles or makes a face, I can see all these wrinkles and lines that were never there when I was a kid," said Fan. "It makes me feel deeply sad inside. It's okay, though, because I can just look at myself while she's talking about something I don't care about and that usually makes me forget about it."

At press time, Fan was spotted tapping on the rectangle in the corner of the screen to enlargen her face as much as possible.

FDA To Develop Unpasteurization Process

In response to Robert F. Kennedy Jr.'s recent appointment as Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) has announced a new initiative to develop a way to add bacteria, viruses, and other contaminants back into previously pasteurized food.

"Until Louis Pasteur decided to boil milk like an absolute freak, humans just died of preventable diseases like God intended," said Peter Lewis, the newly appointed staff scientist who currently leads the project. "We need to return to real food as a society. If God had intended for Cheez-Its to exist, he would've invented a Cheez-It tree."

Karen Mitchell, a raw milk advocate, said, "I'm excited to see the triumphant return of diseases that had been nearly eradicated in the US, such as tuberculosis and scarlet fever. I'm looking forward to all the new strains of listeria, salmonella, and diphtheria we can find once we get rid of this pasteurization nonsense."

Mitchell also expressed hopes that future deregulation will allow for the sale of room temperature raw pork, several day old chickens to defeather at home, and an assortment of wild game scavenged from the side of highways. She said the goal of her advocacy was to "return to only natural, unadulterated foods."

At press time, the FDA had begun to solicit project proposals for a new grant to put autism into all vaccines given to children under the age of three.

Government Announces Plan To Keep White People Busy With New Miniature Sports

The CIA recently declassified documents confirming their involvement in the invention of candlepin bowling.

On Thursday, the federal government announced their plans to create a new department entitled The Office of Miniature Sport (OMS) in order to "keep white people busy, entertained and off of conspiracy forums."

"Look, everyone loves games. America was built on games. Frisbee. Volleyball. Lacrosse which we geniusly stole from Indigenous people," said OMS spokesperson Brad Cooper, "But, those are all very physical. We need something to pacify the Gen X oldies with the weak knees and keep them indoors but also offline. That's why mini-sports are so important. They're the cultural glue we've been missing."

Fellow OMS employee Margaret Kim explained "We all know pickleball and squash. But, times are changing, and we need to keep up. Innovate. That's why I've proposed mini mini golf. It's like mini golf but smaller and less physical. Mini golf is a killer for those above 50. A lot of shoulder action. And once people get hurt, they turn to the internet and get radicalized. It's dark."

The OMS aims to create mini recreational gyms across the country with monthly membership fees starting at $4,000. Cooper elaborated on this price point, claiming, "You might think a mini sport gym fee would be cheaper, but you're wrong. We need custom equipment, full-time referees, a bar, nautical decor, and a merch line of polos. We want to do it right."

Months before the end of their construction, more than twenty thousand white Americans had already signed up for a mini gym membership.

Asked About American Annexation Claims, Greenlanders Respond "Qanoq Oqarnersutit Paasisinnaanngilara"

As political discussions about an annexation of Greenland by the United States have mounted, some native Greenlanders have responded by saying "Uanga tuluttut oqalussinnaanngilanga."

"Isumaqarpunga Kalaallit Nunaata USA-mut ilaalernissaanik isumassarsiaq pissanganartoq, Kalaallit Nunaanni innuttaasoq," said Greenland resident Nukappi Petersen. "Nunat allat oqartussaasuisa peqqussuteqarnerisigut naalakkersuinitsinnik tamakkiisumik allanngortitsinissatsinnut pissutissaqanngilaq.Erseqqissumik oqaatigilaarlara, kalaallit tamanna kissaatiginngilaat."

"USA-mi timmisartuutileqatigiiffimmut inissaqartinniarlugu illup bulldozererneqarnissaa utaqqisinnaanngilara," offered Klara Johanssen, a Nuuk resident. "Neriuppunga nunaqarfiga nunarsuarmi nukissiuuteqarfiit annersaanni marlunni sorsunnermi aallartiffiussasoq."

"Our best translators are working tirelessly to decipher whatever those noises mean," said Stephanie Cardamom, the Trump-appointed US Ambassador to Greenland. "We are proceeding with the expectation that we will be welcomed as liberators."

Final reports indicate that the majority of Greenlanders have remained "generally unconcerned about prospects of US annexation," and "continue to do whatever it is that they do up there. Ice fishing, maybe."

Email Link Jumps To Horrible Scary Mail App

Local woman Jessica Parsons is reportedly recovering from what she describes as a "deeply unsettling experience" after clicking an email link that opened her computer's native mail app.

"I just wanted to RSVP to a potluck," Parsons explained, "But instead, my laptop turned into a horror movie. The screen froze, Chrome blinked like it was possessed, and then the mail app just launched itself. I didn't even know I had a mail app."

Parson's encounter with her inbox only worsened the ordeal. "It's basically a time capsule of shame," she confessed. "It's filled with old screenshots I sent to myself because I didn't know how AirDrop worked and draft emails I panicked and never sent. Honestly, opening the app was like walking into a graveyard of my worst moments."

Jessica's roommate, McKayla Hops, who witnessed the ordeal firsthand shared her perspective, saying that, "When I heard Jessica scream, I ran to help. But when I saw the fluorescently white void of a mail app, I felt too nauseated. Why is there such a massive empty space for such a tiny font?" Hops continued, "Emailing people back is already stressful enough. I don't need the added anxiety of being reminded about some random email account I made in middle school that only gets notifications from Apple and spam porn."

In a final statement regarding the traumatizing experience, Parson acknowledged, "I know I could probably delete it but that seems a bit harsh, plus what will I do if I need a coupon for Michaels?"

Cheese Placed On Wooden Pad Attached To Metal Wiring Seemingly Available For The Taking

Sources in contact with the Jerboa family say they will be holding the wake this upcoming Thursday.

According to multiple sources, a perfectly good piece of cheese currently resting on what appears to be a wooden platform with some kind of metal framework is almost certainly available for anyone to just grab.

"Look, if they didn't want people to take it, they wouldn't have left it out here in the open like this," said Gerald Jerboa. "Plus, it's my favorite kind – a wedge of Swiss cheese."

Further investigation revealed that the cheese, while secured to the platform with totally superfluous metal attachments, seems to be completely unguarded and ready for immediate consumption. The appetizing cheese has, ostensibly, been abandoned to whoever may have the good fortune to find it sitting there, calling to them.

"You'd have to be pretty paranoid to see any downside here," Jerboa added.

The wafting scent of the cheese attracted many Ann Arbor citizens to come out of small holes in the wainscoting of their homes.

At press time, Jerboa could not be reached for additional comment.

New Meta Censorship Rules Lead To Record Levels Of Grandparents Sharing AI Military Propaganda

Recent reports show that grandparents have been showing an abundance of AI-generated military propaganda photos and videos to their grandchildren. The recent influx is thought to be due to the new censorship rules implemented on Meta applications.

Jake Maps, a local student, expressed his concerns, "During Christmas Eve dinner, my grandma showed me 10 different fake military pictures on Facebook with titles like 'Can I get a share for my service?' and 'Everyone skips me because I'm a wounded veteran, can I get a like and share?' I tried to explain to her that they were fake but she insists they are real because they reply to her comments."

Another student, Ava Low reported a similar issue, "My grandpa sends me a new AI military video at least once a week. The last one was literally a child soldier."

Local grandparents weighed in on the subject, "What fake photos and videos? I've seen a few soldiers on my timeline but I'm pretty sure they are real," said Sue Cross, who later opened Facebook and showed what seemed to be an AI generated video of a soldier with the face of Ryan Gosling who had extra fingers.

At press time, Mark Zuckerberg declined to comment, then later shared an AI-generated image of himself with big muscles.

Dad Going To Follow All Of Joe Rogan's Advice Except Exercise

Local father Dave Wilson has announced his plan to adopt all of Joe Rogan's health advice, except for the parts that involve physical activity. Wilson, a 55-year-old self-proclaimed "former athlete," avidly listens to Rogan's podcast because, as he puts it, "Joe just gets guys like me, guys who worked out in college and now treat yard work as CrossFit."

"Joe understands the mindset of men like me," Wilson explained. "My typical gym routine is 20 minutes of lifting weights, followed by 30 minutes in the hot tub."

While Dave Wilson skips the workouts, he's fully committed to Rogan-approved eating habits. "The carnivore diet keeps me fueled," Wilson declared. "Sure, I still eat carbs, dessert, and the occasional pizza buffet, but doubling up on meat and cheese makes me feel like I'm doing something healthy. I mean, if I'm eating two pounds of bacon every morning, how could I not be thriving?"

Bob Wilson's college buddy, George Strobach, chimed in: "Joe brings it back to the golden days when manliness was defined by how many eggs you ate in a day. He really reminds us of what matters: protecting your family, fighting the liberal agenda, and keeping the car running while you pump gas."

Strobach was also quick to dismiss Rogan's exercise advice. "Sure, sprinting 30 feet without pulling a hamstring would be helpful, but that's why I have a gun," he said proudly. "Real men don't need to run when they've got a Glock."

Bob Wilson concluded with one final note: "Joe Rogan keeps me sharp, strong, and sane. Well, except for that time I tried the cold plunge and ended up on the couch for three days. But hey, that's what Rogan would call a learning experience."

RFK Jr. To Grant FDA Approval To Gas Station Boner Pills

RFK mentioned that he was hopeful the move would make his late uncle proud.

Robert F. Kennedy, Jr. has announced that one of his first actions as Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services will be to direct the FDA to grant drug approval to gas station boner pills.

Despite the pills' long history of being unregulated and generally considered dangerous, sources close to RFK Jr. have confirmed that the presumptive HHS Secretary has "done his own research" and can "speak to their relentless, long-lasting efficacy."

"I'm dedicated to restoring the vitality of this country," said Kennedy in a recent press conference. "Big Pharma has tried to suppress these naturally lab-created supplements for too long. It's time that this country's medical establishment firmly lines up behind our hard working men."

According to studies published by RhinoPill69 and BrickLayer, two prevalent boner pill manufacturers, "headaches, temporary blindness, and cardiac arrhythmia are no longer potential side effects" and there have been "fewer reports of death" following a recent reformulation of the drugs.

At press time it was reported that the move had substantial support in the White House and Congress. "It's unthinkable that we— I mean men— have been limited to just four FDA-approved erectile dysfunction treatments," said Texas Senator Ted Cruz. "Men should have the right to choose!"

Punxsutawney Phil Predicts Six Weeks Of Nuclear Winter

On February 2nd, Punxsutawney Phil— the famous groundhog weather watcher— emerged from his tree stump home and issued an articulate, dire warning about future global warfare and the likelihood of a nuclear winter.

"Squeak squeak squeak," said Phil on Sunday at 9 am. "Squeak squeak squeak nuclear proliferation is to Man what wings were to Icarus. Squeak."

In addition to his weather forecast, Phil released a peer-reviewed article co-authored by him and the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists that details computer simulations of the climate effects of general nuclear exchange.

"Phil is deeply concerned about the seeming inevitability of a nuclear holocaust," said Rachel Bronson, President of the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists. "He also loves to get his little paws on raspberries, mulberries, buckwheat, and various wild grasses. Truly the peace voice of our time."

Punxsutawney Phil's prediction follows recent reports that St. Petersburg Sergei, a Russian Groundhog and political dissident, was arrested after staging political protests against the war in Ukraine. 79 Russian secret police "perp walked" the marmot in what historians are calling the "largest and cutest display of state power" Moscow has seen in decades.

Russian political analyst Mark Kazamov said, "Moscow is making an example out of Sergei. In the rise of a multipolar world, Cold-War era authoritarianism is on the rise." Sergei was last reported to be on a "hunger strike" in protest, while a Kremlin official has referred to it as "routine hibernation."

Area Conspiracy Theorist Claims CIA Played Role In President Jimmy Carter's Untimely Death

Just weeks after President Jimmy Carter died at the age of 100, a new theory has emerged that "the CIA was behind his untimely death."

A popular conspiracy blog, The New York Post, points to the inconsistency of official statements claiming that "President Carter died peacefully surrounded by family." They argued Carter "hasn't been at peace since he bungled the Iran Hostage Crisis and got epically lame ducked by Reagan."

The blog offered a counter-theory to the prevailing "lone old age theory," claiming that the centenarian President, who at times forgot his own name, "knew too much and that's why the deep state had to have him killed." While it remains unclear exactly what information Carter was liable to release, nurses at his hospice center reported he had recently been "hyperfocused on something called Bingo and something else called Werther's Original." The blog suggests that these could be codenames for classified CIA operations.

The blog also noted that while President Lyndon B. Johnson had immediately established the Warren Commission to investigate JFK's assassination, President Biden had failed to set up any such commission to investigate Carter's death. This point seemed to resonate with many readers, who asked if "perhaps killing Carter was one of Biden's last executive actions as he tries to secure his legacy as the oldest and most senile President."

An alternative theory, however, is that President Carter has disappeared to the same Caribbean island that Elvis and Tupac call home. There, he will tend to a small peanut farm, "away from the paparazzi and other bullshit that follows you around after winning a Nobel Prize."

Can I Borrow Your Height?

By Grocery Store Woman Before Chopping Off Both Your Legs

Hi there! I couldn't help but notice you have a couple inches on me. It must be nice to have such long legs… such long slender limbs… just being able to reach anything on the shelves your heart desires. What a powerful tread you've got… it must be nice to waltz around with such confidence…

Anyway! I was wondering if I could borrow your height to grab that last can of Spam on the top shelf? I scouted out everyone in the canned meat aisle of this Kroger, and you seem to be my best bet with those long, athletic legs of yours. I've always wished I had legs like that, but I'm more of a torso person, tragically.

Thank you for agreeing to help, it'll only take a second. Hold on… let me get my chainsaw… now where did I put my handy chainsaw… There it is! Please forgive me, I'm a little scattered today. Okay, you might feel this a bit in the bottom calf region of your legs, but I promise it will be quick and easy.

Wait, no, don't cry! I can understand that you may feel a bit scared and anxious right now, but don't worry. I assure you I'm just temporarily borrowing a few inches of your tibia. I promise I'll give them back once I reach this can of Spam!

Thank you so much for your help! Ummm okay… where do you want these? Here, I can just leave them on the ground next to you.

We Need To End Diet Culture

By A Girl Who Just Ate A Baked Potato Chip

This is effed up. Have you seen this? Have you tasted this? No? Oh my god try it - it's a fucking abomination. There's no way this is a potato chip, in fact this is offensive to all potato chips everywhere. Why would they bake them? It's a potato chip - it's not supposed to be healthy. If I wanted to be healthy, I wouldn't have gone for the chips in the first place. I'd have gone for a piece of celery or something.

You know whose fault this is? Kate Moss. That bitch. "Nothing tastes as good as skinny feels," my ass. Plenty of stuff tastes better than skinny feels. Example numero uno: a Lays cheddar and sour cream classically fried potato chip.

Diet culture is ruining everything. Without it, I'd still be able to get some normal chips. Do you know how many people are affected by eating disorders a year? So many, it's horrifying. Early 2000s heroin-chic has done irreparable damage on society, especially on potato chips. It needs to end. We cannot let this go any further.

I'm starting a petition. We need this. Not just for feminism's sake, but for the sanctity of the potato chips. Bring back frying oil! Save the chips!

3:00 AM DARK WEB UNBOXING VIDEO

By Pandora

What is up guys, welcome back to my channel. Today we're going to be doing a dark web unboxing video, at 3:00 am, AKA the witching hour, with my good friends, A.J. and Big Justice. This box was given to me by the king of the gods, Zeus himself. He told me never to open it, but as you all know I'll do anything for my viewers.

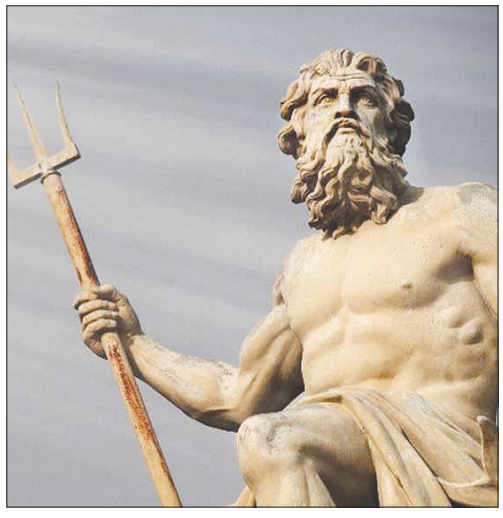
Guys, we are risking our lives and the lives of all mankind by opening this box here, so make sure you smash that like button and subscribe to the channel. If you want to support me even more click the first link in the caption to buy some super comfortable merch and the second to become a member of my Patreon.

Enough delaying, let's get right into it. I'll just peel back the tape here and see what we've got. Oh my gods guys, that is War, Pestilence, Despair, and, wow, Duo Push. Damn, this is a really lucky pull. I can't believe Zeus fit them all in here. As long as I don't let them out, we should be fi– Oh shit, they've already slipped right out. Yeah, they're going to destroy the world as we know it. No, there's no stopping them now. Unfortunately once something leaves the box it can not be put back in by any means, so we are all in for a universe filled with eternal suffering now. Whoops.

Anyways, make sure to go check out the video we did on Big Justice's channel, where he gives my brother-in-law five big booms as his liver is eaten by an eagle.

Just Gimme A Few Decades And I'll Solve The LA Fires Permanently

By Poseidon, Lord of the Sea



Hey guys sorry I'm late, I slept in for a few decades. Damn I haven't seen fires this bad since the fall of Troy, that was a fun one. Now listen, I know you're all scared, but I give you my word as the god of the ocean that I've got a surprise in the works that'll prevent LA, the Palisades, and all those other places from ever getting burned again, you've just gotta wait a few decades so I can really get things rolling.

What is it you ask? Well come on now that would just be boring. Do you not trust the almighty lord of the aquatic to have your best interests at heart? Just ask any of my fine fishy friends how nice I am. Hell, once the surprise is here, it'll be easier than ever to keep LA completely fire-free – no spoilers as to how of course.

Hey what are you doing analyzing those ice cores and satellite data, you can't do that, it'll ruin the surprise! Seriously stop it, I'm in charge of earthquakes too and I'll send one that makes Haiti in 2010 look like a – ok, ok, fine. Yes, it is a massive series of floods but that would prevent it from catching fire. I could do other stuff too! Might turn the central valley into a nice lagoon if I feel like getting REALLY crazy.

Okay, you all are just a bunch of ungrateful human peasants. Imma go throw another hurricane or three at Florida BECAUSE I CAN ALSO DO THAT. Have fun with the rising sea levels shitheads.
